HOME RULERS EXPOUND VIEWS

Inaugurate Their Campaign at Meeting Held at Aala Park Last Night.

In the presence of several hundred people gathered at Aala Park the Home Rule party last night inaugurated its campaign and the leading candidates of the party introduced themselves and each other and expounded the principles of Home Rule.

Charles K. Nottley, as the candidate on the Home Rule ticket for the delegateship, may be said to have been the principal speaker, although his address was short and more or less formal, the other candidates taking up the work of dissecting the platform of the other parties and of expatiating on their own. Among the speakers were William Mossman, Jr., Charles K. Nottley, D. Kalaokalani, Sr., Kealahouma and Oily Bill White.

The Home Rule party convention having endorsed all the candidates on the Republican ticket except Kuhio and the opponent of D. Kalaokalani, Sr., the speakers all advised the voters to support the Republican ticket with the exceptions mentioned. But they did not endorse the Republican platform, especially as regards immigration. Oily Bill White also rung in a plea for woman's suffrage taking the ground that as there are now 12,000 Hawaiian voters, if the women were given the franchise, there would be about 24,000 Hawaiian votes and the Hawaiian people could snap their fingers at haole, Japanese, Chinese, Portuguese and all other nationalities.

Mayor Joe Fern came in for a scoring by several of the speakers, who said that he has done nothing while in office except to shake hands and build up a Democratic machine. Both John C. Lane and Andrew Cox were strongly praised.

The crowd while not large nor especially enthusiastic, was attentive and the telling points made by the speakers were generously applauded. The meeting was not marred by any of the disturbances such as were caused by certain inebriated Democrats on the occasion of the Republican rally last Saturday. About a dozen small boys selling peanuts and soda water made themselves unduly conspicuous and at times almost drowned out the voices of the speakers, but nobody seemed to mind very much and the boys were allowed to make all the noise they wanted to.

Urges Support of Nottley.

Sam Paulo acted as chairman of the meeting, introducing the speakers in a flowery and enthusiastic terms. The first speaker was William Mossman, Jr. Mossman warmly urged the support of Nottley for the delegateship. Kuhio, he said, has done fairly well, but if the people are to make a change, they ought by all means to follow the advice given some of them by some of the congressmen who were here some time ago and send another Hawaiian to Washington.

Mossman advised the Home Rulers not to vote for Jarrett for sheriff. Jarrett, he said, has discharged a lot of Hawaiians from the police force merely because he wanted to create a Democratic machine and the men he fired had refused to do politics as he wanted them to.

Paying his respects to Road Supervisor Johnny Wilson, Mossman wanted to know what Wilson had done. "You brought him here to fix the road," he declared, "but what does he care for the Hawaiians? He says they are all fools. The Democrats are employing a lot of men around the town who do nothing but further the interests of the Democratic machine."

"Pololei!" yelled the crowd. "Compare John C. Lane with Joe Fern," the speaker continued. Lane is a man who could put up some kind of a front. Fern can do nothing but shake hands and make a fool of himself."

Nottley Makes Promises.

After a musical intermission Charles K. Nottley, candidate for delegate to congress, was introduced and was warmly applauded as he advanced to the front of the platform. "I come before you tonight," he said, "asking you for your votes, knowing that I have a difficult task before me, and I do so only on account of my love for the Hawaiians. "If I am successful in going to congress, I will do my best to pass every plank in the Home Rule platform."

Nottley stated that he was strongly against government by commission and would do everything in his power to kill any bill introduced in congress, designed to substitute that form of government in the Islands.

"I believe," he said, "in making new laws and in aiding the settlers from among the poor Hawaiians. If I am elected, I will work for a five-million dollar appropriation to aid in this work."

"The Leader of the World." Nottley's address was short and his place on the front of the platform was taken by Kealahouma, a candidate for the senate, who, in introducing himself, said that his name translated means "the leader of the world." As such a leader he appealed to the voters to support the few Home Rulers running for office. The Home Rule principles, he said, stand for the best interests of Hawaii and the Hawaiians must let their consciences dictate to them in their choice of the men to be elected.

"Do not be initiators," he advised, and he went on to say that just because the haoles on the mainland have a Republican and a Democratic party is no reason why the Hawaiians here should think they must do the same. "Let the Americans have their parties," he said, "but let us stick to our own Home Rule party."

"The leader of the world" stated that he would work to have the price of public lands put at $1.50 an acre. He didn't believe in leaving it to one or two men to fix the price at which the lands should be sold.

Kealahouma also said that if elected, he would work to have a part of the immigration tax used to open homes for orphans and for the support of the poorer people. He advised the Hawaiians very strongly to stick to the Home Rule party and to leave the Republican and Democratic parties to the haoles. "For," he said, "the strength of Hawaii lies in the Hawaiians being united. It makes no difference what party you join, you are called a nigger just the same."

"The Grand Old Man."

D. Kalaokalani, Sr., candidate for the senate and commonly known as the "grand old man" of the Home Rule party, was the next speaker.

Announcing himself as a candidate for the senate, Kalaokalani began by paying his respects to some of the other candidates and incumbents. He strongly urged the support of the voters for John C. Lane for the mayoralty.

"We have had enough of Joe Fern," he said. "The public has seen what he has done and has watched his politics while he has been in office. Let us lift up John Lane. Do not hesitate to elect him; he is a man among men. The reason we did not support him at the last election was that we were then in favor of the Labor party. We made a mistake then, and now we are for Lane."

"We will support Andrew Cox because he is the best man available for sheriff and has no black marks against him. He has been a supervisor for several years, and never has he done anything wrong."

"Shingle we also endorse. If elected, he will be a big help to the Hawaiians. He is an upright man. Richard Trent is a friend of mine, but I know that he is not invincible. We also endorse Carheart and Bicknell. Kalaokalani, Jr., we also support. He is my son, but if he had done anything wrong I would not support him. We will also support Simerson. He is a new man; give him a chance. This is our ticket; support it."

Opposed to Immigration.

Referring to the immigration question, the speaker said it is an old one. The bill was passed by the Republicans and Democrats in 1905. "We do not believe in it," said Kalaokalani, "and if I am elected I will try to change this law so as to put a stop to most of the immigration, using the tax money for other purposes. We can not stop the Filipinos from coming here, as they belong to the United States, but we can use the tax for road purposes. The only way possible is to divide the tax for the improvement of Hawaii, and immigration will take care of itself."

"We do not believe that the Democrats could change this law, as there are too many Republicans for them to be allowed to do so."

Kalaokalani ended by again advising the voters to support the entire Home Rule ticket.

Oily Bill White.

Following some more music from the orchestra, Oily Bill White was introduced, and he promptly began to cut up his usual capers around the platform. Bill evidently missed his calling. Joe Cohen ought to be able to make money if he had Oily Bill on the boards to put a little rough stuff over once in a while. Bill pranced up and down, pretended at intervals to weep in great gobs of sobs, wrung his hands, his voice and the minds of all to himself up there. Incidentally, his manner seemed to take with the crowd, which was kept laughing most of the time.

Extracting the kernel of advice from the husk of Bill's contortions, physical and oratorical, Bill made a bit with the ladies present by strongly advocating the plank in the Home Rule platform that declares in favor of woman's suffrage. "At present," he said, "there are some 12,000 Hawaiian voters, and allowing 12,000 women to vote would increase the Hawaiian vote and prevent the malihini from having a say in our government. Give us woman's suffrage, and we need not fear the Japanese, the Chinese, the Portuguese and the haole vote."

"You Hawaiians are big blamed fools. The haoles some here, take off their hats to you, give you a cigar, and you say, 'The haoles are fine, so polite, they are our friends'—and then you turn around and thrown down your own Hawaiians."
